

The Facts About

FDIC
Deposit
Insurance Coverage

Deposit insurance coverage
under the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation rules.

The FDIC—short for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation—is an independent agency of the United States government. The FDIC protects depositors against the loss of their insured deposits if an FDIC-insured bank or savings association fails. FDIC insurance is backed by the full faith and credit of the United States government to at least $250,000.

From the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation's first day of operation in 1933 through today, not one depositor has ever lost a penny of FDIC insured deposits.

Here are some ways to make sure your deposits are covered to the maximum extent possible.

Basic Insurance—The standard maximum deposit insurance amount is $250,000 per depositor per insured depository institution for each account ownership category.

- Deposits in different institutions are insured separately. However, if an institution has one or more branches, the main office and all branch offices are considered to be one institution.
- Deposits maintained in different categories of legal ownership at the same bank can be separately insured, making it possible to have deposits of more than $250,000 at one insured bank and still be fully insured. See the accompanying chart for examples that can increase your coverage to as much as $3,000,000 or greater.

Retirement Accounts—Retirement account deposits are insured separately up to $250,000. These include IRAs, Keogh plan accounts, 457 plan accounts and certain other self-directed accounts.
